Cold weather to continue with some snow

19 February 2010

The cold February weather is expected to continue with an ongoing risk of snow for parts of the UK, which could lead to some disruption to travel.

Freezing temperatures over the coming nights, could also lead to difficult driving conditions at times for many parts of the country.

The threat of snow remains with us for several more days, as the cold weather continues with widespread overnight frosts and the risk of further snowfall in places.
